

PERSONAL STATEMENT

I am a historian, consultant, and instructor of military professionals. As a historian, I cast a wide net over the English-speaking military forces of the twentieth century (specifically on the emergence of industrialized warfare in the West from 1881-1945), examining the evolution of their organization, culture, operations, and techniques from many points of view. As a consultant, I support academics, civil servants, and service personnel in advising on national security matters such as emergent technologies in historical context. As an instructor, I employ historical decision games and Socratic discussion to encourage critical thinking, foster a culture of initiative, and promote interest in topics from air-ground cooperation to information operations. I am currently a history graduate student at Temple University writing a thesis entitled Building Bridges: Allied Military Engineering and Coalition Warfare on the Western Front, 1914-18. My vocation is service through teaching military history.

WORK EXPERIENCE

Aletheia AI, Research Associate, March 2023 – Present

I am researching and writing historical case studies as part of a historical team assisting the US State Department in devising a counter-proliferation policy for emergent technologies. I manage and task an assistant researcher and coordinate with a technical team for the creation of a multi-spectrum project.

Canadian Forces College, Recurring Guest Speaker and PME Instructor, April – June 2022 & 2023

I researched, designed, and delivered a case method seminar to a senior class of the Canadian military's CFC's National Security Program (NSP) curriculum. This case entitled, Army '86, concentrated on a historical American strategic force development problem during the Cold War. Balancing political policies, emerging threats, and restricted resources in complex strategic environment, the NSP students assumed the role of the US Army Chief of Staff in the summer of 1983. The case was facilitated over multiple virtual sessions.

Maryland National Guard, Chief Archivist of the Witte Memorial 29th Infantry Division Archive and Hancock Library, 2018 – 2021

I preserved, and promoted the responsible use of, a substantial collection of historical material relating to the US 29th Division and the Maryland National Guard. In doing so, I have processed hundreds of inquiries, from both members of the public and public officials, related to the service of both units and individuals. I supervised and supported a project to digitize the holdings of this archive. I have led more than 70 tours through the museum attached to the archive for groups composed of people from many different walks of life. Additionally, I extended the mission of the archive to support the recruitment, retention, and readiness efforts of the Maryland National Guard. To this end, I embedded support for military learning into the formal plans that guided the work of the archive and introduced decision-forcing cases. Some of these cases, like those taught to the 1st Battalion, 175th Infantry Regiment, these were conducted in classrooms. In others, such as the decision-forcing staff ride I led at Antietam for soldiers taking part in the Best Warrior Competition for 2020, it took the form decision-forcing staff rides conducted upon battlefields of the American Civil War.

American University, Research Assistant to Dr. Audrey Cronin, 2018

I provided detailed research support to the composition of AU professor Audrey Cronin's book Power to the People: How Open Technological Innovation is Arming Tomorrow's Terrorists published by Oxford University Press in 2019. My specialization in conventional and unconventional modern industrial warfare was consulted for the opening chapters of the book which establishes the patterns of military technological development over recorded history and how this change exploded at the turn of the 20th century. The book explores the role of modern commercially available technologies in the hands of non-state actors in terrorism and insurgency operations. I assisted in proof reading drafts of the relevant sections and produced regular research reports to the author summarizing the historiographical arguments on military technology and technological determinism in warfare.

Case Method Project Marine Corps University, Teaching Fellow, and Honorary Resident Historian, 2014 – 2018

I taught decision-forcing cases, on a wide variety of subjects, to students at the US Naval Academy, the Basic School, the Expeditionary Warfare School, and the Marine Corps Command and Staff College, as well as Marines serving in the Operating Forces. I assisted other case teachers with research, archival and otherwise, into amphibious operations, particularly those of the First World War and the South Atlantic War of 1982. I participated in Antwerp 1906, the recreation of a classic (double-blind) wargame exercise featuring an expeditionary force landing near a major fortified port city. I facilitated a case method seminar to our allies in the British Army's Education and Training Service at 1st Division H.Q. in York, UK and presented an article on the relationship between theatre strategy, the media, and morale to the Fall 2017 Inter-University Seminar on Armed Forces and Society entitled, A War of Inches: The Effect of Wartime Journalism on American Troop Morale in the Italian Campaign, 1943-45. Lastly, I contributed a chapter, "Rising to the Occasion: the U.S. Army Expansion in the World Wars 1900 – 1945," in Matthias Strohn's anthology, How Army's Grow.

"It was a privilege to have you lead and walk the students through this learning methodology. You promoted student engagement through critical thinking, discussion, and debate; all-important elements to professional education and career development. I am confident that the class gained a much better appreciation of the challenges in decision-making and the strategic considerations leaders need to think through when formulating options and strategies."

- Brigadier General J.W. Errington, Commandant of Canadian Forces College, 2022 (Letter)

"Your presentation was well prepared, polished, and offered historical scenarios that were both interesting and relevant. The near-universal feedback I received is that the event was one of the most effective and engaging professional development experiences in which the Battalion's officer have ever participated."

"Alexander came over to the UK to teach us (Officers of the British Army) about the case method and using real-life situations to practise and generate thinking skills and decision making. As well as being a thoroughly professional and rigorous historian, he is an excellent teacher and great company. I highly recommend Alexander to any potential employer. He is particularly well suited to working with the British Armed forces, due to his wealth of knowledge in this area."
